Taylor Swift added another great honor this year—the first-ever Taylor Swift Award—to her crowded shelf of industry awards at the 64th annual BMI Pop Awards.

Held at the Beverly Wilshire Hotel in Beverly Hills, California, the ceremony honored the writers and publishers of the most performed pop songs during the past year. The Taylor Swift Award, which has been previously announced, was a recognition of both Swift's musical influence and creative and artistic talent.

In her acceptance speech, Swift acknowledged that she was happy to get the award named after her. “It is really a relief that BMI decided to give me the Taylor Swift Award, because if they had chosen somebody else to give it to, I'd be like kind of angry about it,” the singer joked.

This eponymous (同名的) award marked only the second time in BMI's 76-year history that the organization has presented an award in an artist's name. Michael Jackson, a legendary artist, was the first to achieve that honor in 1990.

“Taylor Swift has transformed pop culture through her songs, artistry and persistent spirit,” said Barbara Cane, BMI's Vice President of Writer/Publisher Relations, in a statement.

“She has had a profound impact, not only musically, but also through her personal belief and commitment to create a standard that values and respects music for everyone. We felt it appropriate to award Taylor with an honor that is as unique and special as she is.”

Swift also claimed four of the year's most-performed songs to earn the honor of Pop Songwriter of the year.
